

John Creer started his real estate career in Salt Lake City and has nearly 30 years of experience in commercial real estate development and management for private and public projects. He has led ASU's real estate office since 2013, overseeing five innovation districts in the Phoenix valley, including a biomedical campus, Omni Hotel, conference center and mixed-use development. Prior to Arizona State, he worked with the Trammel Crow Company, co-managing the Los Angeles Unified School District's $28 billion capital program and developing a $3.5 billion master plan for public and charter schools, as well as a K-12 teacher housing project. As chief real estate officer, Creer works as a liaison between the university and the communities around it. The chief real estate officer oversees the team focused on all university real estate transactions, as well working to develop market analyses, site selection plans, and coordinate real estate development negotiations.
